

Clr Anthony Martinelli first moved to Cambridge aged 18 to study Medicine at Gonville & Caius College. After two years working in London, he returned to Cambridge where he works at Addenbrooke's where one his particular interests is lung disease. He is a Liberal Democrat Councillor for Market Ward.

Building on Achievement

It has been striking to see how the sense of community in central Cambridge has flourished since March. We've seen aid groups set up by residents with the aim of helping strangers and the vulnerable: grass-roots movements, growing street-by-street, which have delivered food, provided medicines, and given comfort to the lonely. With the nation under the shadow of a deadly disease, people have turned to their neighbours and found they had more support than they had ever previously imagined. Many of these connections have been made virtually, but we all look forward to meeting new friends in person when the time is right. It has been a real illustration of community resilience in action, beyond all our expectations - we really need to build on these achievements as we face an uncertain future.

Clr. Martinelli with his own personal NHS rainbow